To Whom It May Concern:

Quantrax Corporation has a dialer platform called I-Tel that is integrated with its collection system called RME x. The dialer is built by Sytel Corporation in the UK. With regard to the use of autodialers in the United States, there have been specific guidelines for their use. The collection industry has always claimed that debt collection calls are not directed to randomly or sequentially generated telephone numbers, but instead are directed to the specifically programmed contact numbers for debtors. This document confirms that this is the case with Quantrax's dialer software. We do not utilize a random or sequential number generator, as has been done with telemarketing applications. We can only place calls to numbers that are already associated with a consumer, or an agent has sufficient reason to believe may belong to or lead to the consumer.
